Practice Services

Subscriber and Chartered Practice Benefits

An information and advice service available to all architectural practices by subscription

Working for the Profession

The RIAS Practice Department tackles legal and contractual issues, commissioning, fees, appointment arrangements, insurance problems, dispute resolution and legislation as well as monitoring the work of other industry bodies. All of this feeds back into CPD for architects.

We offer advice and information to interested parties, other construction professional bodies, trade associations, MSPs, the Scottish Government, Local Authorities as well as gathering essential statistical information about the profession. We advise on dispute resolution and maintain the RIAS Panels of Experts.

Support for Practice Services enables the RIAS to engage in activities for the benefit of all practices. Feedback for practices is available through Practice Notes, the Practice Bulletin and tailored Practice CPD events.

Why subscribe?

Becoming a Chartered Practice

RIAS practices which subscribe to Practice Services now have Chartered Practice status subject to meeting the eligibility criteria (see overleaf).

Meeting your CPD requirement

The information contained in Practice Notes is invaluable to all architects. This knowledge is regarded as an essential and major component of an architect's contribution to their RIAS and ARB commitment to CPD. RIAS Practice Notes are available on the website or published quarterly in folders; they include information from a wide range of professional and technical organisations, including government legislation, consultations and regulations.

Information you can rely on

The legal adviser considers that Practice Information is an important means by which current knowledge is disseminated to the profession at large and therefore likely to be treated as something which the ordinary architect using reasonable skill and care should consult. It could be relied upon to demonstrate what an ordinary architect would know of a particular issue.
